Reference [REDACTED]

1. Have read reference communication on [REDACTED] and pass on this data for your information. [REDACTED] B-6

[REDACTED] is an interrogator. He had a fair reputation but was boastful and arrogant. [REDACTED] was [REDACTED] interrogator at the same camp and knew [REDACTED]. After World War II, [REDACTED] rose rather high in [REDACTED] partially because he was one of the few interrogators who stayed in the service when a knowledge of German was at a premium. He was civilianized. A B-6

2. In 1947 in Washington, [REDACTED] heard from other personnel of our organization more about [REDACTED]. One technological expert had had contact with [REDACTED] before joining the organization and was convinced that [REDACTED] was a charlatan, pretending to have technical knowledge he did not possess. B-6

3. [REDACTED] will undoubtedly know some of the [REDACTED] personnel now in [REDACTED] building, including [REDACTED], who was also a P/W interrogator. Unfortunately [REDACTED] also knows [REDACTED] and they have seen each other casually around [REDACTED]. H-6 B-6

4. While I do not pretend to have had official contact with [REDACTED] since World War II, I recall the distinct impression that he was a slippery character and not to be trusted too far. Perhaps it would be wise to see whether he has any real information on drug techniques before coming to close quarters with him on the subject. I suggest that a physician ask him just what he knows about drugs. B-6
